

Latino Youth Development Collaborative: Amplifying advocacy confidence

It's not with ease that one can navigate our school systems. And that's where LYDC steps in with Promotores y Promotoras.

100 Latinx parents

The 12-week, in-depth program for 100 Latinx parents dives into child development, scenarios one might encounter at a school (behavior, academic, low expectations) and local politics. Parents gain confidence to initiate communication with schools, research and stay informed on school performance, and advocate at the Capitol.

Many parents who face significant barriers don't often encounter schools ready or open to their inquisitiveness or expectations.

LYDC embodies the knowledge journey of parents; it's also about the people and policies embracing a new norm where parents are true partners in their children's education.
